

Distance Family Therapy Training—upskill in your own space, at your own pace!

I am about to enter my fourth year of Post Graduate studies. In conjunction with these I have participated in a number training programmes specific to my field of practice. The Family Therapy 1-2-3 Distance Course was one of the most informative, extensive, enjoyable courses I have completed. There were times when it challenged my own previous learnings and experience. It has allowed for the incorporation of my own practice into developing a safe and structured Family Therapy programme. There were a large number of resources available throughout the course which allowed for further research into theories and practice. This would rate, in my view, one of the best courses I have completed, either distance or on site. My employer is impressed with the outcome and supports any further advanced courses that may be available in the future. Quentin Matson, CAMHS, NDHB

If you've been unable to attend Rick Whiteside's family therapy courses because of time, travel, or finances, this distance course may be the answer you've been looking for.

The training package, which you can complete at your leisure for the all-inclusive low fee of $460, provides sufficient hours to qualify for specialised membership in NZAFT.

Once you register for the training, you will be given access to the online version of Whiteside and Steinberg's An Interactive Guide to Family Therapy, as well as worksheets to document learning (click here to see an example worksheet).

Upon submission of these forms by email, participants will be issued a certificate verifying they have completed 40 hours of family therapy training by an NZAFT Approved Trainer.
